After a temporary closure of a month Crawford Art Gallery reopens to the public on Thursday 21 April with a full programme of Exhibitions and Events

The short window of closure saw construction company PJ Hegarty working onsite to investigate behind the scenes of the almost 300 year old building. The purpose of the Investigations, which were carried out on schedule, was to understand more about the fabric of the building in order to assist with the design and cost plans for the redevelopment which is due to begin on site late 2023.

The Crawford Art Gallery, a significant and much loved visitor attraction, is now confirmed to receive visitors in time for the busy holiday making season ahead.

Commenting on the year ahead Director Mary McCarthy had this to add 'We are relieved to have phase 1 of the investigations work complete, which went really smoothly thanks to the expert team from PJ Hegarty's and the collaboration with the OPW. It was a fascinating process seeing deep into the building, below the floors and into the walls. The investigations will continue at the back of house areas for a further number of weeks as planned.

We are delighted to be open as we enter late Spring and Summer and have an exciting programme of new exhibitions opening Thursday including the hugely popular Zurich Portrait Prize in collaboration with National Gallery of Ireland and Botanica: The Art of Plants an exhibition on plant life that features many of our recent acquisitions.

We are reinvigorating our family tours and Sunday programmes and we look forward to having the public back in the building and supporting Cork thrive as a cultural city.

The Summer programme will be dynamic and participative with a significant Summer exhibition Meat and Potatoes - which explores food through art works over the centuries and brings together some of Cork's leading food advocates for discussion's and experiments'.

From April, Crawford offers a very diverse programme of exhibitions featuring the Galleries own national collection with Botanica : The Art of Plants and The Port of Cork Collection as well as additional contemporary exhibitions, SATURATION : the everyday transformed and the brand new Zurich Portrait Prize 2021 and Zurich Young Portrait Prize 2021. A showing of Jellyfish Lake by Dorothy Cross also features in the screening room.

Crawford Art Gallery once again welcomes the highly anticipated Zurich Portrait Prize to Cork and Munster, in partnership with the National Gallery of Ireland. Sponsored by Zurich Ireland, this is the third time the exhibition will travel outside of Dublin to Crawford Art Gallery, creating a wider opportunity for the public to encounter the remarkable portraits on display.

Visitors can also look forward to the return of popular free Tours , every Sunday and Bank Holiday Monday at 2pm and a vibrant Learn and Explore programme for schools, specialist groups and the wider community.

More about the Capital redevelopment of Crawford Art Gallery

In 2021 An Taoiseach, Micheál Martin T.D. and Minister for Tourism, Culture, Arts, Gaeltacht, Sport and Media, Catherine Martin T.D. announced that the design contract for the redevelopment at the historic Crawford Art Gallery was awarded to Grafton Architects. The overall plan provides for considerable investment through Project Ireland 2040 for the redevelopment of the gallery buildings over the next four years.

Cork-based construction company PJ Hegarty and Sons worked with Crawford Art Gallery and its design team lead by Grafton Architects and the Office of Public Works to carry out a series of detailed investigations onsite from 21 March to 21 April 2022. The investigations will inform final design decisions in advance of a planning submission which will be made to Cork City Council in late 2022. The Gallery reopens to visitors on 21 April 2022.
